

TWENTY INCHES AND FALLING ON RED LODGE MOUNTAIN RESORT

The first major snowstorm of the season has blanketed Red Lodge Mountain Resort with over twenty inches of snow. Starting Sunday afternoon, the snow began piling up from town up to the peak of the Resort. At least seven inches are expected to fall through the day.

Director of Sales and Marketing Jeff Carroll comments, “we are thrilled with this early season snow and we know it will put down an excellent base and benefit our skiing conditions- not only in the early season, but consistently as we begin to open different areas of the mountain.” The snow is expected to fall through the day with a winter storm warning in effect through the evening.

Red Lodge Mountain Resort will be opening for the ski and snowboard season November 27 and will be celebrating its 50th anniversary this season. More information about the resort and season passes can be found on their website at www.RedLodgeMountain.com or by calling 406-446-2610.
